New iMac Accessory Cuts Desk Clutter and Lets Laptops Breathe Easy

Athens, OHIO – iMac users craving more desk real estate now have a cool, inexpensive new accessory to turn to. The iRac is a keyboard holder that enables Mac addicts to stow their keyboards up and off their desks. It can also be used as a laptop stand for any brand laptop.

As a keyboard holder, the iRac simply wraps around the computer's monitor post. When set into the iRac, the keyboard hovers over the CPU, clearing the user's desk for other tasks.

"The iMac's flat-panel monitor is functional and beautiful, but you can't set your keyboard on top like you could with a CRT monitor," said Sam Girton, inventor of the patent-pending keyboard holder and an Ohio University professor of Web and print design. "When I'm not using my iMac, the keyboard clutters my desk space. The iRac clears the way."

As a laptop holder, the iRac holds the computer up off the user's desk so air can move around the computer more freely, causing the cooling fan to come on less often. This means less wear and tear on the machine, as well as a quieter workspace.

The iRac's design is just as sublime as the iMac's. Made of heavy-duty, .187-gauge stainless steel, the iRac is available in sleek, powder-coated white with white rubber sock tips to protect the keyboard, or stainless-steel with clear rubber socks.

Made in the U.S.A., the iRac retails for $9.95 and can be purchased online with a money-back guarantee at theirac.com. Bulk order discounts are available.
